NEWS OF THE WEIRD

The parents of wannabe singer-actor-celebrity Marissa Leigh, 16, of Scottsdale, Ariz., employ 10 people for her career development, according to an April Arizona Republic story. They include manager, publicist, voice coach, two acting coaches, people to do makeup, hair and wardrobe, musical composer, photographer, and webmaster (plus, of course, an entourage of confidence-boosting friends). "She's spoiled," said her mother, "but hopefully, it's a grounded spoiled." However, on her national TV debut, on MTV's "My Super Sweet 16" (a party which her parents spent $150,000 to stage), she was caught saying "I'm a princess" and "I'm such a rock star that I can do this" and "I always get exactly what I want." Even after MTV cut the two songs she sang, she was optimistic: "(This show) 'll still put my name out there and stuff."

Trustees of the Gateway Unified School District voted 4-2 to close Canyon School at the July 26 school board meeting. The meeting was held at the school's campus in Lakehead (above).

Trustees vote 4-2 to close Canyon School

Gateway Unified School District trustees on July 26 voted 4-2 to close Canyon School in Lakehead, but not without hearing protests for nearly three hours from local residents and the board's representative for the area.

With a declining enrollment that was projected to see just 19 students enrolled for the upcoming school year, including only two entering kindergarten, administrators said the campus was costing more and more each year to operate.

"We're looking at 19 (students) to start the 2006-2007 school year and find it hard to justify paying to keep Canyon open," Superintendent John Strohmayer said.

Last year, the district spent roughly $315,000 to operate Canyon, a K-5 school, which worked out to approximately $15,000 per student for the 25 or so students there, Strohmayer said. Other schools in the district cost as little as $5,000 per student to operate. Funding for schools are based on an average daily attendance.

"The long and short of it is we just don't believe there are enough kids here," Strohmayer said. "And we have to provide the best education for all of the kids (in the district)."

Strohmayer and Trevor Stewart, director of business services, said the district had attempted several options to keep the Lakehead campus open, including spot legislation they hoped to have state Sen. Sam Armistead sponsor to have Canyon designated a "necessary small school" and qualify for funding that would otherwise be unavailable to the district.

For one to 25 students, the school would receive $108,000 toward operating costs, and for 26 students or more it would roughly double to $216,000, Stewart said. But Stewart said Armistead's office refused to sponsor the legislation.

Still, several members of the audience addressed the board and administrators asking why more had not been done to keep the campus open, including going out for grants or letting the community volunteer by taking on custodial and food service jobs at the school to help cut costs.

Kari Brewster, who owns Brewster's Restaurant in Lakehead, said she could make breakfast and lunch for the students at no cost.

Stewart, however, said grants really don't pay for the basic services that are needed to keep the school operating, such as salaries for the teachers. And union contracts, he said, would have to be re-negotiated to let community members volunteer at the school for union jobs, something the union may or may not accept.

Stewart said a parcel tax in the area was a possibility to bring in revenue, but when an audience member asked if the district could guarantee the money would stay in Lakehead to operate Canyon, Stewart replied, "there are no guarantees" to which several of the 75 or so in the audience groaned.

Stewart said the obvious intent would be to use that money to operate the school, but he added that a parcel tax could take a couple of years to go into effect since voters would have to approve the measure. Also, there was no guarantee the community could get the two-thirds votes needed for passage.

Also discussed was Canyon becoming a charter school, which takes a lot of parental involvement, administrators said, as well as the school leaving Gateway Unified School District through de-unification.

"Yes, Canyon could de-unify," Stewart said in response to a question, "but it would require a lot of work."

If the school closed, the district could consider it surplus and sell it, he said.

"But first it would have to be offered to another school district, then to the state and then to a non-profit (like a church) before we could then go to the public to sell it," he said.

Parents were also concerned about other issues, including busing the children down to Grand Oaks or Shasta Lake schools in Shasta Lake.

Teresa Ramsey, wife of Gateway trustee Greg Ramsey, asked when the first students would be on the bus and for how long. She was told it would be around 6:40 a.m. at the Gibson stop and would be 50 minutes for the first ones on the bus.

"So breakfast at 6:15 or 6:20, on the bus at 6:40 and then 50 minutes, I just don't see how you can do that," she said. "Are there potty breaks?"

Strohmayer said there are students in the outer areas of Shasta Lake who are on the school bus for 50 minutes, so it was not unique.

In response to snow days, Strohmayer said the district works closely with the California Highway Patrol for road conditions. If the snow is too severe in the morning, student absences would be excused. Likewise, if a snowstorm was expected in the afternoon, students from the Lakehead area would be excused from class early to return up north on the bus.

By the end of the discussion, however, Gateway trustee Greg Ramsey, who represents the Lakehead area on the board, said there were still too many options available for the district to act now.

Ramsey said he was upset the item had even been included on the agenda for the June board meeting. He urged fellow board members to give the school another year to improve its enrollment numbers.

"I was appalled it was on the agenda last month during the middle of the summer and with little time to react," he said. "I say we get the senator up here and show that we are a necessary small school (to receive the funding) and get to that 26th student."

Ramsey proposed the school remain open for one more year under a reduced services budget Stewart had come up with of $246,000, which was still about $110,000 more than revenues that were projected for the school. That budget would include, among other things, two teachers and a custodian/bus driver and food service worker. There would be no office manager.

If by the preliminary 2007-2008 budget next spring, the cost per student was projected to be down to $6,500 ADA, Canyon would remain open, Ramsey proposed. If not, the school would be closed.

"Yes, $100,000 is a chunk of money, but we'll have a time frame, a year to try all these things," Ramsey said. "If it doesn't happen, the community knows it."

Board president Rose Smith seconded the motion, but when put to a vote, they were the only two to vote for it.

Trustee Kay Kobe said there was no way she would close the campus unless she thought everything had been done to try and keep the school open without continuing to cost the district more money each year.

"But with the laws we have to follow, the contracts we have...the school district has done its part," she said. "Retirement communities don't provide children."

"Are there kids here? I don't think there are," trustee Debbie Bourne added. "Most homes here are second homes for people or retirement homes."

Following Ramsey's failed motion, Kobe made a motion that Canyon be closed for the 2006-2007 school year. If an enrollment of 45 students could be generated for the 2007-2008 school year, the campus would be re-opened, she proposed.

Kobe, along with Bourne and trustees Dale Wallace and Ken Matias voted in favor of the motion. Smith and Ramsey voted no. Board member Fred Braun was not in attendance.

With his vote, Matias also asked that the district keep a presence on the campus by offering independent study or home schooling to parents in the area who may want that option.

Body found at lake

A passing boater found a body floating near Potter Creek Monday around 12:30 p.m. on the McCloud River Arm of Shasta Lake, the Shasta County Sheriff's office said.

Authorities believe it may be the victim of a boating accident that occurred earlier this year.

On May 1, an unoccupied houseboat, traveling at full throttle, ran into a second houseboat, which was unrelated to the first, the Sheriff's department said.

The whereabouts of the occupant of the first houseboat, 42-year-old James Kenneth Cooke, was unknown and officials entered him as a missing person.

The coroner's office said an autopsy was scheduled Tuesday.

Mountain Gate man arrested on charge of attempted murder

A Mountain Gate man was arrested and booked into the Shasta County jail July 26 on charges of attempted murder, assault with a deadly weapon and shooting into an inhabited dwelling.

Kevin Angelo Dixon, 43, was being held on $500,000 bail.

According to the Redding Police Department, officers were dispatched on July 26 to a reported shooting on the 2000 block of Pine Street in Redding. When officers arrived, they said they contacted Eddie Ray Ricker, 49, of Redding.

Ricker said he had received a phone call from his ex-girlfriend's husband stating he was coming over to his motel room to shoot him, Redding police said.

Ricker said that while he was standing outside his motel room, Dixon drove up in a vehicle where upon a verbal argument ensued and, according to Ricker, Dixon pointed a rifle at him.

Redding police said Dixon fired one round from the vehicle striking the motel wall before he fled the area in his vehicle.

Officers requested assistance from the Shasta County Sheriff's office in checking for Dixon at his residence in Mountain Gate. According to Redding Police, deputies located Dixon's vehicle at the Mountain Gate residence. A short time later, Dixon left in his vehicle and was stopped.

Dixon was transported to the Redding Police Department investigation division where police say he was questioned and allegedly confessed to firing one round at Ricker from a high powered rifle.

Don't go there

By GENNIE SEELY

It should dawn on globe trotters that traveling abroad could be classified as an "extreme sport." Perhaps it is not as strenuous as bungee jumping or skateboarding off Mt. Shasta, but the results could be more devastating.

One guideline I have tried to live by is that, in order to stay out of trouble, it is wise to stay away from trouble. Now it would appear that trouble is pretty much global. Perhaps now would be the time to stay closer to home and partake of local scenery and entertainment.

Driving on the freeway or Cypress Avenue in Redding during rush hours should suffice as living dangerously.

I don't know why it is taking so long for the message to get through: There are people who have sworn to kill as many Americans as possible. Call them terrorists or Muslim radicals; we are on their hit list.

They certainly all want our money. But the vestige of "The Ugly American" has re-emerged. Now we even have some of our own citizens and lawmakers bad mouthing our country here and abroad. What is the world to think when we have irresponsible citizens trash talking their own country?

Interestingly enough, many of these "trashers" got where they are, either economically or prestige-wise, because of the way that America allows its people to work and prosper. I believe it is referred to as the American dream. Too bad that some choose to bite the hand that feeds them.

It isn't as though most countries receive fair and balanced news. Too many judge all Americans by what they see on television. They see the bizarre and the gaudy, not the hard working average American. Yet it is the average American that is the backbone of this country. When many of our own lawmakers fail to acknowledge this fact, how can we expect more from foreigners?

It is true that some Americans must go abroad because their jobs demand that they do. But don't tell me all those thousands of American we had to rescue from Lebanon had to be there because of their work. Many were on "vacation." And here I always thought that vacations were for relaxing and escaping from the stress of daily life.

Just getting to places of possible danger can be hazardous. The cruise ships' records of late raise some serious concerns for the safety of their passengers. To further muddle the issue, it depends on what country has jurisdiction in the international waters in which the ship is cruising at the time.

We should also realize that criminal investigations and the search for truth and justice do not follow the same procedures in all countries. The Natalie Holloway case in Aruba should make that pretty clear. I believe I could forego any scenery or entertainment in that locale if I ran the risk of running afoul of the local predators. I certainly wouldn't send my teenager there without a chaperone.

The troubles and debates of the Middle East are centuries old. They have yet to be resolved. This area is depicted in school history books as once the center of civilization. What happened? It certainly has huge religious significance. Many places there are considered sacred to many different religions.

All who would worship there contend that they abhor violence and killing. Yet the killing goes on. It would seem that someone is lying or uses his particular belief system to serve his own purposes. Notice that I say "his." There seems a disproportionate lack of female presence in most pictures of this area.

At one time women were expected to serve some time in the military in Israel. Whether this is still the case, I am not sure, but I tend to believe it is still the case. The precarious circumstances of that country probably necessitate all its citizens to be ready to defend themselves at all times.

But where are the rest of the women in the Middle East? All one sees are the men and boys when an explosion takes place. That should speak volumes about the area.

We know that there are women there. How else did the men get there? When a woman is seen, she is completely covered from head to toe by cloth. I seriously doubt that it is a fashion statement made by the women. Rather it was imposed by the men. This has been the case for years. Women have had little value or power in that area of the world.

We can expound endlessly about the various cultures of the Middle East and their powerful influence on the world because of oil. But anyone who ignores their treatment of half their population, women, appears to condone the treatment. Perhaps that could

Shasta Fire turns into three fires

The Shasta Fire began as a six acre fire on July 25 at 3:52 p.m., west of the railroad tracks and slightly north of Shasta Dam Boulevard. Above, an air tanker drops retardant near where the fire started. Two spot fires over the next day burned an additional 134 acres and 28 acres. After the original fire burned toward Oliver Street, the first spot fire jumped over the houses on that street and continued to burn north. "(Oliver Street's houses) had good clearance and was easily defensible, which assisted fire crews to protect those structures," Shasta Lake Fire Protection District Battalion Chief Jan Smutz said. In addition to Oliver, structures on Central were also threatened by fire, some within 50 yards, Smutz said. At the height of the fire on the night of July 26, 332 personnel were on scene, including 15 hand crews, three helicopters, 33 engines, 12 dozers, four water tenders and 22 over head. The cause of the blaze is still under investigation.

be one reason this area can no longer be considered the center of civilization.

We hear continual complaints about our system of justice. Unfortunately it is not politically correct to criticize the Muslim terrorists' system of justice. They kidnap, torture and behead their captives. If we had such a system where people could target anyone, and be his or her judge, jury and executioner, we would not tolerate it for long; yet we pussy-foot around, even refraining from calling these people terrorists.

These terrorists have no compunction about killing us. They even state that it is okay to lie to infidels. That's us, folks. So how does one negotiate with someone sworn to kill you, and would not hesitate to lie about any agreement negotiated? Don't go there.

The power of one

THE | DIET DETECTIVE®

By Charles Stuart Platkin

When talking to people who are trying to lose weight, I often come across the "dieter's paradox": They "hardly eat anything," but they still don't lose weight.

This seems to be one of our biggest problems - we never believe we're eating anything.

It's been reported in the New England Journal of Medicine that people attempting to lose weight tend to underestimate the amount they eat by as much as 47 percent and to overestimate their physical activity by as much as 51 percent.

When scientists at the USDA's Beltsville Human Nutrition Research Center in Maryland asked 98 men and women to state how much they ate in a 24-hour period, they found that six out of seven women underreported by an average of 621 calories, and six out of 10 men underreported by an average of 581 calories.

When the American Cancer Institute did a study asking Americans to determine the portion sizes of eight specific foods, only 1 percent got them all right. Sixty-one percent couldn't get more than four correct.

What should you do?

Challenge yourself to find out what you're actually consuming. Keep track of everything you eat, even the small, insignificant foods, (e.g. a piece of gum or one grape) for at least three or four days.

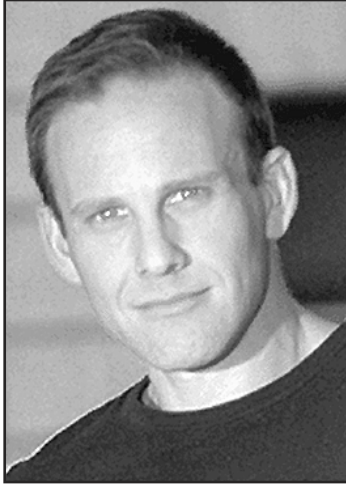

Why do those little things matter? According to some researchers, we consume on average about 1 million calories per year, and just 25 extra calories per day means an additional 2.5 pounds per year. Multiply that by 10 years, and you've just put on 25 pounds - that's how it happens.

Following are the calorie counts for "just one" of a few different food items. And remember that you would have to walk for one minute to burn off every four calories you eat in excess of your daily calorie budget (an average of 2,000 calories).

Also, keep in mind that the point of presenting the calorie "costs" of these foods isn't to get you to stop eating them, but rather to get you to think about your food before you eat it.

One Pringles potato chip vs. one McDonald's french fry

Believe it or not, one french fry has only five calories, while a single Pringles chip is double at 10 calories.

One grape tomato vs. one green seedless grape

The winner: The grape tomato has only one calorie, whereas a green grape has four. However, both are great choices, particularly for their antioxidant content (e.g., grapes have flavonoids and tomatoes have lycopene).

One strand of whole-wheat spaghetti vs. one sip (tablespoon) of Campbell's Select Herbed Chicken with Roasted Vegetables Soup

The strand of spaghetti has only 3.5 calories, whereas the sip of soup has 6.25 calories. Keep in mind, however, research indicates that eating a low-calorie soup is a great way to fill up before a meal.

One stick of Wrigley's Juicy Fruit gum vs. one piece of Bazooka

I have mixed feelings about gum: Some people say it helps them control their weight, but I don't love the way it looks. That said, who would think that chewing two or three pieces of gum a day adds up to 4.5 pounds per year? The winner here is Juicy Fruit at 10 calories, compared with Bazooka's 15.

One M&M vs. one Jelly Belly vs. one Peppermint Altoid

M&Ms can be a pretty good deal at times, especially if you're comparing them to a regular candy bar (one bite of a Hershey's bar with almonds has 37 calories), which always seems to disappear so fast.

Also, if you're sharing M&Ms, they split up nicely because you can pass the bag back and forth. However, they have 4.3 calories per piece, which add up fast as you're popping them into your mouth.

As far as jelly beans go, well, I hear a lot about them being low in fat, but that doesn't mean very much - they're still four calories per bean. If you're satisfied with a few, that's great, but watch out for unconscious candy dish consumption.

Altoids and other mints are another story. They supposedly serve a function - to freshen your breath - so the calories don't matter, right? Sorry, but all calories count, and please spare me the argument that it takes work to suck on the mint. One Altoid has almost 3.5 calories.

One bite-size cube of cheddar cheese vs. one Famous Amos Chocolate Chip Cookie

Clearly the cheese is the better choice nutritionally, but you need to know that cheese is not a health food you can consume without guilt. One bite-size (1/2") cube has 55 calories, whereas the cookie has only 37.5 calories. Whenever possible, go with low-fat cheese. A great one is Cabot's Vermont 50 percent Light Cheddar - 35 calories per bite-size (1/2") cube.

One Fritos Original Corn Chip vs. one cashew nut

Here again, the cashew has health benefits that far outweigh those of the nutritionally bland corn chip; however, cashews have 8.5 calories per nut, whereas Fritos contain five per chip.

So just because you hear that nuts are healthful doesn't give you carte blanche to overindulge. You're supposed to eat nuts in place of something else in your diet that's high in calories and nutritionally inferior, not simply add them.

One broccoli floret vs. one baby carrot

Both are super vegetables. Basically, you can't eat enough of either one.

Carrots have the antioxidant beta carotene, which may reduce the risk of heart disease and cancer and promote better vision, especially night vision, while broccoli is just loaded with health benefits (high in vitamins A, C and K and a great source of iron and folate).

OK, so which is lower in calories? It's the broccoli at 0.8 calories; the baby carrot has 1.25.

Create Your Own Food Diary

If you would like to keep a food diary for a few days (I recommend at least three), follow these few simple steps.

Meal, Time and Place

Record the approximate time you sit down to eat. This may help you find the eating schedule that works best for you.

Also, record what meal it is (e.g., breakfast, mid-morning snack, etc.) and where you ate it, whether it is on the run, sitting at your desk, at a restaurant, etc.

Hunger Level

Record your level of hunger on a scale of one to five, one being the least hungry and five being the most hungry. You should aim to be between three and four when you're eating.

Dining Companions

Write down with whom you eat and what you talk about. This information could offer clues to unconscious eating or stress eating.

Feelings and Mood

Record how you feel before, during and/or after you eat.

Before is probably the most important because it can have the greatest effect on how much and what you eat. Try to keep track of whether you have general feelings like being happy or sad, or specific ones like "stressed at work," "angry at spouse" or "having a great day."

Food and Drink

Record all the individual foods you eat and the beverages you drink, including accurate portion sizes.

Anything that goes into your mouth should be in your food diary, including nibbles from the refrigerator and bites from other people's plates.

Nutrient Information

Record the calories, fat and carbs for each food/meal you eat. Total your calories at the end of the day to make sure you are staying within your allotted calorie budget.

To figure out the calories, carbs and fat in many of the foods you eat, go to www.dietdetective.com/calories/, which lists more than 7,500 foods.

Savvy Senior

Senior-Friendly Cars

Dear Savvy Senior,

Is there any research that evaluates the best new cars for senior citizens? My wife and I are both in our seventies and are looking for a new vehicle. What can you tell us?

Car Shopping Seniors

Dear Car Shopping,

With nearly 20 million licensed drivers in the United States age 70 and older (that number is expected to double by 2030), auto makers have started implementing better features and options in certain vehicles to accommodate the growing needs of older drivers. But what makes a good car for seniors? For many, top priorities include a vehicle that's easy to get into and out of, easy to adjust for fit and comfort, easy to maneuver and see out of, as well as reliable and a good value.

Best Senior Vehicles

Recently, Edmunds.com (the top rated on-line resource for automotive research information) evaluated current models based on senior-friendly features as well as performance and overall quality. Here's what they came up with (and why) as the best new vehicles for seniors. All are 2006 models.

Toyota Avalon

Prized for its roominess and comfort, this full-size sedan is a top-rated favorite of older drivers. Senior-friendly features include a standard tilt and telescoping steering wheel, which makes it easy for the driver to find a safe, comfortable seating position, and available heated power seats, for soothing aching backs. It also offers a keyless ignition, which does away with grasping and twisting an ignition key (instead the engine is activated by touching a button). Manufacturer's suggested retail price (MSRP): $26,775 to $33,965.

Ford Five Hundred

This large sedan offers a tall seating position, which makes for an easier entry and exit for seniors who have problems bending and stooping. Other handy features include a standard heated, power-adjustable driver seat with memorized settings for two drivers. Pedals that adjust to accommodate your size are also available, as are rear parking sensors, which sound a signal to indicate how close you are to what's behind you when you're backing up. The trunk is the largest in its class with a low "belt-line" entry level which makes loading and unloading the trunk much easier. MSRP: $24,430 to $28,730.

Toyota Prius (hybrid)

You may be surprised that a smaller-sized hybrid made the list but the Prius has features that make life easier for older drivers who have arthritis and other joint problems, including a buttonless, easy-to-move shifter. Other handy options include keyless ignition, touch-screen controls and an optional voice-command system lets you control temperature, GPS navigation, audio and Bluetooth cell-phone dialing simply by speaking. An available backup camera display provides a rearward view on a screen on the dashboard, making parking easier for those with arthritis of the neck or spine. And anyone can appreciate this hybrid's excellent fuel economy - typically in the mid-40s miles per gallon. MSRP: $21,725. (Note: Substantial federal tax credits are available to most hybrid buyers. See www.hybridcars.com to learn more.)

Buick Lucerne

Another long-time favorite among older drivers has been the Buick LeSabre. The LeSabre however has been discontinued, but its replacement for 2006, the Lucerne is even better. Improvements include better handling and more supportive seating, and senior-friendly options are seats that can be heated and cooled and rear parking sensors. MSRP: $25,265 to $34,265.

Toyota Sienna (minivan)

If you're looking for something bigger to transport your grandkids or friends from time to time, you'll like the Sienna's roominess. Handy options include power sliding doors, a power rear hatch, power folding rear seat, voice activated controls and a backup camera with front and rear parking sensors. And seniors with significant mobility problems can order a "Mobility Upgrade" package (www.toyota.com/mobility) that includes features like hand controls, electric swivel lift-up seats and a wheelchair/scooter lift. MSRP: $23,775 to $38,380.

Savvy Notes: Other top vehicles for seniors on Edmunds.com's list are the Chrysler 300, Honda Civic, Pontiac Montana (minivan), BMW 7 Series and the Audi A8. Edmunds.com also noted that next years list (2007 models) probably wouldn't change much from this year, but they would add the 2007 Mercedes Benz S-Class as a top rated senior-friendly luxury model.
